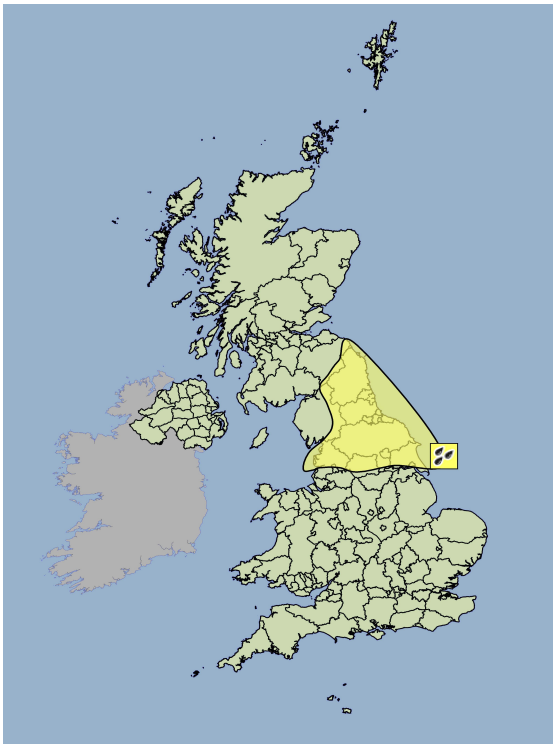
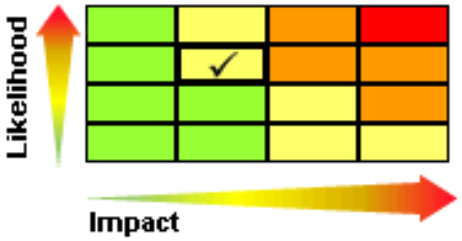
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
An area of low pressure will move westwards across central parts of the UK from the North Sea on Saturday. This will contain some very moist air and is likely to generate some heavy rainfall. The heaviest rainfall is likely to occur during the morning before easing in places during the afternoon and then finally dying out during the evening. There remains some uncertainty as to the extent of the heaviest rain and related impacts, though these now look most likely to be across the northern half of northern England. Therefore this warning has been updated to exclude some southern parts of the region, along with the north Midlands and Lincolnshire, from the warning area.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 05:30 on Sat, 18th May 2013 until 21:00 on Sat, 18th May 2013

Further outbreaks of heavy rain are expected to spread westwards across northern England today (Saturday). The public should be aware of the potential for some localised disruption to due to surface water or river flooding.
